Thomas,

It's common to invite men to a Bible study and have a fraction of them actually show up. On top of that, the fallout rate is pretty high. So, I designed Elevate to be a place where men "Collaborate" under a formatted process that focuses on developing friendships into relationships while incorporating biblical studies that teach spiritual growth for living from the inside out. Taking life to a new level lines up with Jesus' teachings to live as a new creation the abundant life he has for us.

Building friendships and relationships through a commitment to come together for a period of time, establishes longevity in attendance. Collaboration aids the merging of the minds and hearts to brainstorming ideas, help resolve issues and encourage each other toward greatness, thus elevating life and living. Collaboration develops partnerships with each other.

Elevate is an early morning gathering. Typically this type of early meeting or mid-day meetings attract professionals with flexible schedules and or men with incredible discipline as well as the old guys that are close to retirement or simply retired. These men are more likely to stay the course long term. This gathering separates men into small groups of 2-6 men. The commitment to come together to build and encourage each other is dynamic for these types of men. The flow system we will implement in the organization will also help develop new candidates for Point Man.
